Imagining the hunt:

cutting-edge,
collaborative,
digitally human & reciprocal

Interface 2009
Southampton
9 July

Willard McCarty
Professor of Humanities
Computing
King's College London
staff.cch.kcl.ac.uk/~wmccarty/

1. Keynotes and conversations

2. Cutting edginess

3. Collaboration (and interdisciplinarity)

4. Digital humanities

5. Humanities' contributions to computer science (and vice versa)

"The subject does not belong to the world: rather, it is a limit of the world."
Wittgenstein, Tractatus 5.633

"The subject does not belong to the world: rather, it is a limit of the world."

Wittgenstein, Tractatus 5.633

1. Keynotes and conversations

2. Cutting edginess

3. Collaboration (and interdisciplinarity)

4. Digital humanities

5. Humanities' contributions to computer science (and vice versa)

"The subject does not belong to the world: rather, it is a limit of the world."
Wittgenstein, Tractatus 5.633

1. Keynotes and conversations

2. Cutting edginess

3. Collaboration (and interdisciplinarity)

4. Digital humanities

5. Humanities' contributions to computer science (and vice versa)

"The subject does not belong to the world: rather, it is a limit of the world."
Wittgenstein, Tractatus 5.633

FIGURE 1

1. Keynotes and conversations

2. Cutting edginess

3. Collaboration (and interdisciplinarity)

4. Digital humanities

5. Humanities' contributions to computer science (and vice versa)

"The subject does not belong to the world: rather, it is a limit of the world."
Wittgenstein, Tractatus 5.633

Theoricos Empiricis felici connubio zu conjugiren und mit einem des andern defectus zu suppliren.

Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz, Grundriss eines Bedenkens von Aufrichtung einer Societät (ca 1671)

FIGURE 2

"The subject does not belong to the world: rather, it is a limit of the world."

Wittgenstein, Tractatus 5.633

Not
The End